

SIR JOSEPH TICHBORNE

A Former Lady Tichborne Started Famous Case.

(Copyright, 1913, by the Brewster Company.)
Sir Joseph Tichborne's recent marriage to Miss Denise Greville, daughter of Colonel Henry Fulke Greville of the 18th Hussars, is a source of great satisfaction to the old Catholic aristocracy of Great Britain. The family is one of the most ancient Catholic houses and has been in possession of Tichborne Park, in Hampshire, since before the Norman Conquest. As Sir Joseph is its only male representative, it will become extinct on his death unless he leaves a son and heir.

Of course there is just one possibility in a thousand—or a million—that Sir Joseph is not the sole living representative of the Tichbornes. For he holds the Tichborne baronetcy subject to the reappearance of the missing Sir Roger Tichborne or else of his legitimate descendant in the male line. But there is little prospect of this, and the statute of limitations has by this time outlawed any such claim as far as the extensive estates are concerned.

Every claimant to the baronetcy and estates that has turned up within the last half century since the disappearance of Sir Roger Tichborne, in 1854, has proved to be a fraud; the most notable case being, of course, the Wapping butcher and ex-convict, Arthur Orton, whose assertions that he was the missing Sir Roger were endorsed by a number of foolish persons, who furnished him with money that enabled him not only to live in luxury but finally exposed and sent to jail, but also to bring about one of the greatest causes célèbres of the nineteenth century.

The person principally responsible for this fraud, which saddled both the Tichbornes and the British government with such vast expense in connection with the several trials, was Henriette, Lady Tichborne, mother of the missing Sir Roger and great-grandmother, therefore, of young Sir Joseph Tichborne.

Brought Up in France.

She was an illegitimate daughter of Henry Seymour, of Knoyle, in Wiltshire, and had been brought up wholly in France. The Tichbornes are very proud of the bloodiness of their blood and of the integrity of their descent, and regarded Sir James's marriage to her as a terrible misalliance. She was in consequence thereof subjected to no end of slights and affronts not only by the relatives of the Tichbornes, but by the county families of Hampshire and by the old Catholic aristocracy.

This ended by imbuing her with an almost insane hatred of the Tichborne family and of everything English. She caused her eldest son, Roger, to be brought up almost wholly as a Frenchman—so much so that when he left England he could speak French like a native and could not write correct English. She had not been allowed to have her way with her younger son, Alfred, who escaped her control, and consequently she hated him.

It was largely owing to her intense animosity toward Alfred that she absolutely declined to believe in the death at sea of her eldest son, Roger, and that she persisted in advertising for him, although his demise had been established to everybody else's satisfaction. Her foolish advertisements in English, Colonial and foreign newspapers, besides disturbing Alfred in his possession of the title and estates, led to all sorts of attempted frauds on the part of people anxious to take advantage of her condition of mind in the matter, and when Arthur Orton, the former Wapping butcher and ex-convict, appeared in England from the wilds of Australia she professed to recognize him as her long missing son.

How Orton Was Defeated.

Perhaps the most dramatic incident of the trial, and the one which contributed more than anything else to the defeat of the claimant, and to his exposure, was furnished by the real Sir Roger's cousin and charming fiancée, Katherine, daughter of Sir Edward Doughty, and who died a few years ago as the wife of Sir George Radcliffe. When she was seventeen years old she became engaged to the real Sir Roger. Her father insisted, however, that she was too young to wed, and that she should wait two or three years to test her own heart, and that of her betrothed, before marriage. It was on this that Sir Roger sailed on that voyage from which he was never to return, leaving behind him in her possession a paper inclosed in a sealed envelope.

This sealed envelope was produced by the defendants in court. The claimant was then asked to declare what was in this sealed package, and under the stringent compulsion of the judge and counsel stated on oath that he had betrayed his young cousin, and that the document consisted of instructions as to her care in the event of her becoming a mother.

It was then that the opposing counsel, to the dismay of the claimant, broke the seal of the envelope in court, opened it, and showed to the judge and jury the written vow of the real Sir Roger to build a chapel to the Blessed Virgin if he should be married to his lovely cousin within three years. It ran as follows: "If God spares me to return and marry my beloved Kate within three years, I promise to build a church and to dedicate it to the Blessed Mother."

Claim Proved Fraudulent.

This proved the claimant to be a fraud, and it was this slander by the claimant concerning "Cousin Kate" which formed the chief basis of the charge of perjury on which he was subsequently sent to jail for a long term of penal servitude.

Sir Joseph's father, the late Sir Henry, born in 1866, as the posthumous child of Alfred, the younger brother of Roger, and therefore as a small boy the principal defendant in the suit by the claimant, spent the greater part of his adult existence in the wilds of Africa, in India, and in the most remote portions of Asia, in the pursuit of big game, owing to the persecution to which he was subjected from his childhood until his death by crabs, who were forever endeavoring to see him, or write to him letters, many of a threatening nature, claiming to have discovered clues or proofs positive of the existence of his uncle, the missing Sir Roger, who, born away back in 1830, would now be a man eighty-three years of age.

About fifteen years ago the information thus tendered appeared so plausible that Sir Joseph's mother, the widow of the late Sir Henry Tichborne—Sir Henry being beyond reach at the time, in Central Africa—actually considered it necessary, for the sake of his interest, to travel all the way to Australia for the purpose of investigating the history of an elderly inmate of the public lunatic asylum at Sydney, who it was asserted was the missing Sir Roger. Nor was it until she had spent a good deal of time and money in connection with the matter that she was able to ascertain the man's true antecedents, which showed conclusively that he was not the missing baronet.

This Lady Tichborne, who on her son's impending marriage will become the dowager, belongs, like him, to one of the old Catholic families of England, being a daughter of Edward Petre, grandson of the ninth Lord Petre.

All sorts of medieval customs are kept up at Tichborne Park, the family place in Hampshire, which has belonged to the Tichbornes from the time of King Edward the Confessor. Among the most curious is that known as "the Tichborne dole," which has been maintained without any interruption, year by year, for eight centuries. When Mabel Lady Tichborne, wife of the Sir Roger Tichborne who flourished in the reign of King Henry II, lay ill, and believed herself to be dying, she prayed her husband to set aside for the poor as much land as would enable her to institute a dole of bread to all comers at the gates of Tichborne Park on Lady Day. Sir Roger took a brand from the hearth and promised her as much land for the purpose as she could enclose while the brand was burning.

Dame Mabel, according to tradition, caused herself to be carried from her bed to a spot which is still pointed out, and began creeping on her hands and knees. Before the brand was consumed she had encircled several acres, which are still known to this day in that part of the country as "the Crawls." Since then, 800 years ago or more, the Tichborne dole has never ceased to be distributed on every Lady Day. Nowadays it takes the form of a large gift of flour to each family in the village of Tichborne, the distribution taking place in front of Tichborne House.

'SHADDER' PICTURES END 200 BOYS' HOMESICKNESS

Little Pilgrims to the Tribune's Fresh Air Fund Home Didn't Have Time for That.

RIDE IN "ORTERMOBEELS"

Landing Party That Left the Metropolis Saturday Finds the Place Invaded by 150 Girls Who Preceded Them.

The landing of the pilgrims had nothing on it, if you will permit us the un-Pilgrimmatical expression. For those two hundred boys who set foot on the soil of Ashford Hill, the Tribune Fresh Air Fund's home at Ardsley, N. Y., last Saturday it was as much the "promised land" of freedom as the stern and rock-bound coast was to the faithful hundred of 1829.

It wasn't a question of freedom of worship, of course, but of freedom of play, wild leg-stretching play over the vast spaces of woodland that make up Ashford Hill, a question of vacation freedom, far from schools and streets and bustling crowds.

The "landing" was made at two places. The "big" boys—averaging about eight years old—disembarked at Mount Hope, Ashford Hill being about midway between that place and Ardsley, and went forward on foot to spy out the land, about a mile over the hills. The "little" boys, who, by the way, were all anxious to disavow the appropriateness of the adjective, stuck by the good ship Pullman until Ardsley drifted into view through the starboard windows—no, they weren't port-holes.

'Ortermobeels' for Little Boys.

There they were loaded into "ortermobeels" and—if the truth must be told—invalidated the efforts of the reconnoitring party that was footing it up from Mount Hope, by arriving at the land of milk and honey before it.

It turned out all right, though, as it happened, for they found that the place had been invaded and conquered on the preceding day by some 150 girls, many of them the sisters, cousins and neighbors of the landing party. The boys weren't sure whether this novel idea of having the women folk explore the unknown territory first was due to the "ladies' first" maxim of chivalry or a result of the machinations of the suffragette element. Nor did they care.

It was enough for them that there was room left and to spare, and that the early comers seemed inclined to welcome the later ones, if not with open arms, at least with smiles.

Better than the knowledge that the enemy Indians or Philistines, as you will have been driven out and the land occupied by the womenfolk was the knowledge that Superintendent Austin, who has been watching just such parties of pilgrims from the city arrive at Ashford Hill for a dozen years, was on hand with his staff and ready to minister to the physical needs of the occupying force as they might make themselves known.

As soon as a few of the newcomers had had a chance to put their stamp of approval on the swings, seesaws and ladders with which the new land proved to be provided the superintendent took the opportunity to show his skill in this respect by leading the way to the dining room. Here there was ample evidence in sight that if the land did not flow with honey it at least did afford milk and other good things aplenty.

Other arrangements, too, had been made which, it must be confessed, rather put to shame any pretensions these latter day pilgrims might have made to being real dyed-in-the-wool seekers after hardships. There was the fact, for instance, that a clean white bed in a clean white dormitory was waiting for every one of them and did away with any necessity for using the stones for Jacob's pillows.

There was the other fact that a savings bank had already been established where one might deposit against one's need any stray copers that one might have brought on the pilgrimage. There was the fact—what's the use? there were too many such facts to bear repetition.

No Time to Get Homesick.

One other thing should be mentioned, however, and that is the provision Superintendent Austin had made against homesickness on that first night in the new country. Every one knows how the hearts of that earlier band of pilgrims must have yearned at first for the friends and scenes of the land they had left. Picture the possibilities, then, for those fellows who "landed" on Saturday. Think of "Tom," "Dick" or "Harry," aged six to eight, trying to go to sleep in a strange place with images of "Jack" and "Katie" and mother at home flitting across that dark space just above his shut out such images, and that is by giving "Tom," "Dick" or "Harry" so much else to think about that he has not time to bother with things that he has left behind him for two weeks.

The way this was done on Saturday night was by "shadder pictures," as "Tom" called them. And if you had ever seen how funny Superintendent Austin or some of his staff look when they dress themselves up and make shadows on a sheet for you, you would understand why "Tom," "Dick," too, laughed so hard before they went to bed that they could only think of the ache in their sides after they got there, and didn't, therefore, cry themselves to sleep because mother was miles away.

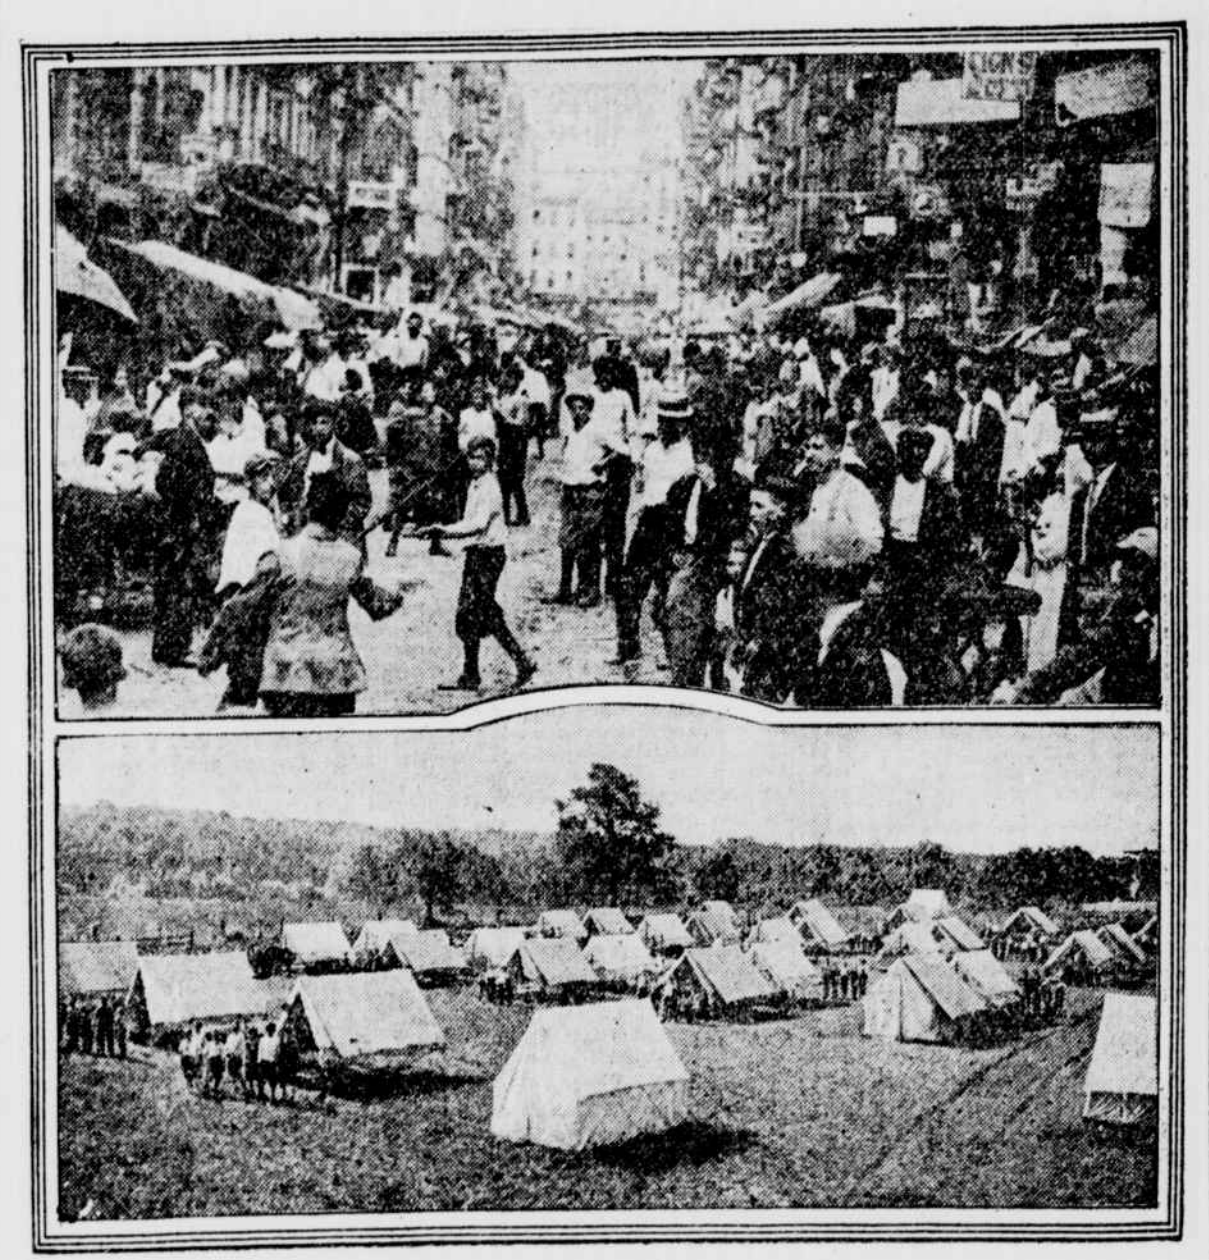

The camp at Denville, N. J., will be opened to-day, and the contrast between the crowded East Side, from whence most of the boys will come, with the wide air spaces at the camp is effectively shown in the accompanying cuts.

WANT ORTHODOX JUDAISM Congregations in Convention Vote for Restrictions.

Representatives of more than one hundred congregations, most of them from distant cities, were present yesterday at a convention of the Jewish Congregations of the United States and Canada, in the auditorium of the Talmud Torah, in East 111th street. The purpose was to further the work of orthodox congregations, and especially to uphold traditional Judaism against the reform and liberal tides.

The president, the Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, of this city, read his annual report at the forenoon session, when the auditorium was filled, and at an afternoon session most of its recommendations were approved.

What was considered of large importance was the decision to form a Beth Din, or tribunal, with representative orthodox Jews as members, which shall certify to qualifications of men applying for the rabbinate, and especially shall settle religious controversial questions.

The Beth Din is in part after the Biblical tribunal, and is needed in America, it was said, because of the prevalence here of Judaism of many kinds. It will be regarded as a central authority among orthodox Jews.

Another matter agreed upon was the recognition of the United Synagogue of America. The United Synagogue stand for orthodox Judaism, said Dr. Mendes, and the convention decided to foster the synagogue, with the requirement that all committees occupied with subjects affecting traditional Judaism shall be composed only of ministers or laymen who themselves are loyal to the requirements of traditional Judaism.

MRS. WILSON AT CHURCH Attends Congregational Services at Windsor, Vt.

Windsor, Vt., June 29.—Perfect June weather greeted Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and her daughter Eleanor on their first full day at Harlaenden House, the new summer capital, in Cornish, N. H. In the morning Mrs. Wilson and the President's niece, Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, motored over to Windsor to attend services at the Old South Congregational Church. Their coming was not expected and there was only the customary congregation.

A few of the women parishioners hurried out to greet Mrs. Wilson and ushered her into church, where the Rev. John Frederick Snyder, the new pastor, preached his first sermon to the congregation.

U. S. COMMISSIONERS IN PARIS France To Be Systematically Covered in Three Days.

Paris, June 29.—A full programme has been arranged for the week's visit to France of the American Commission of Agricultural Organization, Co-operation and Rural Credits, the members of which arrived in Paris to-night. The French government has appointed a committee of experts to make preliminary studies and to assist the American investigators in their work, and has designated M. Etienne Clementel, Minister of Agriculture, and Georges Pallain, governor of the Bank of France, as honorary presidents.

The American Ambassador, Myron T. Herrick, was also requested to act as honorary president, and both he and Mr. Clementel dropped other engagements for the purpose of devoting themselves to the commission's work, which will begin at the Ministry of Agriculture to-morrow.

The members of the American and French commissions will lunch with Ambassador Herrick, who later will present the Americans to President Poincaré at the Elysée Palace.

The commissioners have arranged to divide themselves into five groups and will visit various parts of France. Their researches will extend over Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and they will complete their studies in Paris during the remainder of the week.

PERRY CELEBRATION PLANS Nine Governors to Take Part in the Exercises at Erie.

Erie, Penn., June 29.—With the centennial celebration of Commodore Perry's victory on Lake Erie only a week away, final plans have been perfected.

Peace Sunday, July 6, will usher in the festivities and services will be held at all churches in celebration of one hundred years of peace between the United States and England.

Tuesday will be Reception Day, and the Du Pont powder wagon from Wilmington, Del., will be received by naval militia from the Wolverine, the oldest iron vessel in existence.

Wednesday will be Mothers' and Children's Day, with a parade of 12,000 school children. Wednesday is to be Governors' Day. Eight Governors from adjoining states are to be guests of Governor Tener of Pennsylvania.

Thursday will be Naval Day, with Secretary Daniels reviewing the naval parade, and a sham naval battle depicting Perry's victory on Lake Erie will be fought.

Friday will be set for Friday, with a parade and a street carnival. Saturday, which ends the celebration, is to be known as Industrial or Erie Day. At sundown the Erie Niagara will sail out of Erie Harbor as she did one hundred years ago.

A PITTSBURGH ORCHESTRA Andrew Carnegie Backs Project to Use Only Local Talent.

(By Telegraph to the Tribune.)
Pittsburgh, June 29.—Through the financial aid of Andrew Carnegie it is planned to give Pittsburgh a symphony orchestra, composed entirely of talent trained here.

The new organization is to replace the defunct Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, which failed through lack of financial enthusiasm after having conductedors such as Victor Herbert and Emil Paur. Arthur A. Hamerslagh, director of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, said to-day:

"The school of music in the Institute, which, as a department of the School of Applied Design, has been conducted since last January in an experimental way, has been found to yield such satisfactory results that it has been decided not only to make it permanent, but to broaden at once the scope of its work. Additional instructors have been engaged and a full set of orchestral instruments has been purchased. The scope of musical training in the public schools will also be broadened."

DEATH RELEASES CITY GIFT Hartau Estate Provides $35,000 for Prospect Park Statue.

The death of Mrs. Henry Hartau, widow of a former president of the Metropolitan Plate Glass Insurance Company, at her home, No. 551 Washington avenue, Brooklyn, on Saturday, releases a fund of $35,000 which Mr. Hartau directed to be used in erecting a statue of Lafayette in Prospect Park. The woman had a life estate in the fund.

The care of erecting the statue will rest on Eugene H. Winslow and Julian D. Fairchild, executors of Mr. Hartau's will; Charles A. Scherer, ex-Mayor of the city of Brooklyn, and Dr. St. Clair McKelway, chancellor of the State Board of Regents. The statue is to be modeled after a picture of Lafayette that appears in a copy of Irving's "Life of Washington," which forms part of the Hartau library. After the death of Mr. Hartau, in 1908, his relatives contested the provisions of his will relative to the statue, but lost.

A "LITTLE NELL" BED Dickens League Dedicates One at Coney Island Home.

A "Little Nell" bed was dedicated yesterday by the American Dickens League at the West Coney Island Health Home of the Children's Aid Society.

About twenty members of the league stood about the flower-filled crib while the Rev. Dr. James D. Wasson, pastor of the Church of the Strangers, of Manhattan, Dr. Irving W. Voorhees and President Mortimer Kaplan, of the league, spoke.

The league has already endowed "Little Nell" beds in children's hospitals in Boston and New Haven, and plans to place one in every children's hospital in the country.

WORSHIP IN OPEN AIR Churches Start Summer Services in 30 Different Centres.

Open air services started yesterday in about thirty different centres, some of them on the church steps, some in tents and even on roofs of parish houses. The largest tent opened was Tent Evangel, at 124th street, near Morningside avenue, where 4,000 persons attended the afternoon and evening services. The Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church has a place fitted up on the roof to seat about 400 people.

The Second Avenue Baptist Church, the Collegiate Baptist, the Calvary Episcopal, the Scotch Presbyterian, the Madison Avenue Methodist and most of the Harlem churches also started this method of worship.
